

|                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                             |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                          |
|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| TITLEDeveloping a common Body of Knowledge for a master's in human-centred AI                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                | TYPE - BEST PRACTICE IN:Programme designBENEFICIARIESPrivate training providers, Public HEI and VET providers                                                                                                                                                      |
| CONTEXT<ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>Developing human-centred AI programmes and courses delivered in multiple languages across Hungary, Italy, Ireland and the Netherlands, to support the legal, regulatory-compliant, and ethical adoption of AI.</li> </ul>                                                                                      | THE CHALLENGE<ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>Addressing inconsistent requirements across countries and institutions.</li> <li>Fitting with the university culture, particularly when it comes down to selecting whether to adopt an applied vs. technological approach.</li> </ul> |
| THE ACTION<ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>Organising learning events, such as panels and expert workshops, using the expertise of all partners, that will comprise the Human-Centred AI master's Programme, including study materials.</li> <li>Developing a common Body of Knowledge in collaboration with industry and research centres.</li> </ul> |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                          |
| TAKEAWAYS<ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>Transpose the Body of Knowledge to national formats for validation.</li> </ul>                                                                                                                                                                                                                               | Barry Feeney, Head of School of Enterprise Computing and Digital Transformation, TU DublinOn behalf of hcaim                                                                                         |

Read more